The harmony of lyricism and drama in his poetry

In Feinberg's poetry, lyricism and drama complement each other, presenting the reader with a touching spiritual experience. While his lyrical poems describe the inner world, feelings and experiences of a person in a delicate and sincere tone, his dramatic poems raise serious problems related to society, justice and the fate of humanity. While the poet's lyricism expresses the elegance of life and human feelings, his dramatism gives his works philosophical depth and artistic impact.

His lyrical poems are often devoted to the themes of loneliness, love, dreams and memories. In these poems, human experiences are expressed with deep artistic images. In his dramatic poems, issues such as life and death, justice and truth, and the fate of man are deeply analyzed.
