Foreign language proficiency is currently a requirement for receiving a trade degree. There is a critical requirement for learning as a result of the extensive collaboration between experts in many industries and foreign partners. Today's culture places an increasing emphasis on learning foreign languages as part of occupational training. Individuals first acquire such knowledge through institutions, training programs, or by being familiar with the fundamental knowledge sets that enable them to freely learn a foreign language after attending schools, colleges, and lyceums. People with varied levels of language proficiency can now choose from a wide variety of instructional resources. This objective's achievement depends on teachers' astute strategies and aptitude.

The ability to integrate information technology and contemporary teaching techniques helps students pick up new information quickly. A instructor can finish some courses by fusing different approaches. Teachers and students gained knowledge about contemporary methods for teaching foreign languages in this regard. You'll be able to choose the approach that will help you reach your goals as a result. Using a variety of teaching and learning styles can still result in effectiveness. Teaching takes place in little chunks and is predicated on the student's prior knowledge foundation. Pronunciation is the focus at this point. According to Harmer, pronunciation is the primary requirement for a natural speaker.

Early on in the teaching process, the teacher should focus specifically on the students' pronunciation. Grammar and vocabulary are essential, but they have no value if the speaker pronounces the words incorrectly. If a speaker pronounces the words correctly, even grammatical errors in speech can be understood by native listeners. As a result, pronunciation teaching is prioritized. In this situation, the utilization of varied audios from native speakers produces positive effects.

On a daily and incremental basis, there is a growing desire for learning a foreign language. Speaking, reading, listening comprehension, and reading are the four parts of a foreign language, each of which offers specific knowledge and abilities.

Conclusion. The employment of educational technology in the educational process makes it a potent tool of contemporary information technology. It will also seek to boost the quality and efficacy of education by combining current innovative technology into the educational process. Using such information and communication technology, especially when learning other languages, has several benefits.
