

MODERN METHODS OF TEACHING ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR YOUNG LEARNERS

Djurayeva Gulnoza Yuldashevna

University of Business And Science

The 2nd grade master's student

Abstract: Modern methods of teaching English grammar for young children are one of the important tasks for teachers and educational institutions. English is widely spoken in global communication, and its grammar is different from that of Uzbek. Therefore, it is necessary to use modern and effective methods in teaching English to young students.

Keywords: English, grammar, interactive lessons, motivation, discussion, global problems, communication.

It is important to encourage early age pupils to participate actively. Interactive games and activities can be organized to increase children's interest at the lesson. For example, by creating role-playing games, group discussions, or short scenes in English, children have the opportunity to put their knowledge into practice. This method, not only learning grammar, but also developing communication skills. The use of a new technology makes the educational process more interesting and effective to learn grammar. Through mobile apps, online platforms, and multimedia resources, children gain more motivation in the English language learning process. For example, through apps like Duolingo, Quizlet, and Kahoot, young learners can consolidate their knowledge and improve new grammatical rules. Through these resources, children will have the opportunity to learn independently in their time.[1]

It is important for children to take a contextual approach in the process of learning grammatical rules. Before teaching grammatical rules, it is necessary to give real-life examples to children. For example, when teaching them the present simple Tense, they may be asked to describe simple situations in everyday life. This method allows students to practice grammatical rules and makes them more understandable. It is important to encourage children to engage in written and oral activities. By encouraging readers to write short stories or keep diaries in English, their writing skills can be developed. Also, encouraging children to express their thoughts in English increases their verbal communication skills. The teacher should call on children to actively participate in the process of mutual exchange of ideas and mutual assessment.[2]

It is necessary to apply an individual approach to children. Each children has a unique learning style, so teachers must organize classes to suit the needs of the children. It is important to identify the strengths and weaknesses of the children and provide them with appropriate support and additional material. Through this, children can consolidate their knowledge and gain self-confidence. It is important to give children the opportunity to self-assess. Children should be able to analyze themselves in the process of assessing and developing their knowledge. Teachers can give children a variety of tests and tasks to test their knowledge. This method provides motivation for children to see their progress and achieve their goals.[3]

It is also important to teach children culture in English. Along with English, children must be familiar with the culture, traditions and customs of English-speaking countries. This gives young generation a deeper understanding of the language learning process and makes them more interested in English. Through the study of Culture, students become more aware of the purpose of language acquisition. Teachers need to update their knowledge regularly. Learning about modern educational styles and methodologies can help teachers make their work more efficient. There are opportunities for teachers to gain new knowledge through seminars, trainings and conferences. Through this, teachers can make their lessons more interesting and effective. It is important to celebrate the success of students. Recognizing and encouraging student achievement increases their motivation.

Teachers should encourage young learners by evaluating their success and giving them small gifts or certificates. This method gives children additional motivation to improve their knowledge and achieve their goals.[4]

Conclusion:

As a result, modern methods of teaching English grammar to young children are many and varied. Teachers must adopt interactive, technological, and contextual approaches to suit the needs of children. By ensuring active children participation, taking an individual approach, and celebrating their success, they can become more effective in learning English. At the same time, teachers need to update their knowledge and improve their work. All this will help young children succeed in learning English.

References:

1. Abdurahmanova, M. (2020). "English teaching methodology". Tashkent: Teacher.
2. Kadyrov, A. (2021). "Modern educational technologies and English". Samarkand: SamDU publishing house.
3. Karimova, N. (2019). "Interactive methods for English learners". Bukhara: Bukhdu publishing house.
4. Tursunov, S. (2022). "Innovative approaches to grammar learning". Andijan: Andijan State University.
5. Israilova, D. (2020). "Organizing English classes for young students". Fergana: Fergana State University.
6. Murodov, A. (2021). "Modern methods of teaching English". Tashkent: Science and technology.
7. Holov, R. (2023). "Interactive methods and resources in teaching". Against: against State University.